An eco-recreation ropes course and tree canopy walk through the wetland area adjacent to the White River on what is currently Riverside Golf Course create opportunities for adventure.

A view of the wetland from what is currently the first tee of Riverside Golf Course. Boardwalks and shelters throughout, along with the conversion of the Riverside club house to a nature center, become places for observation and education.

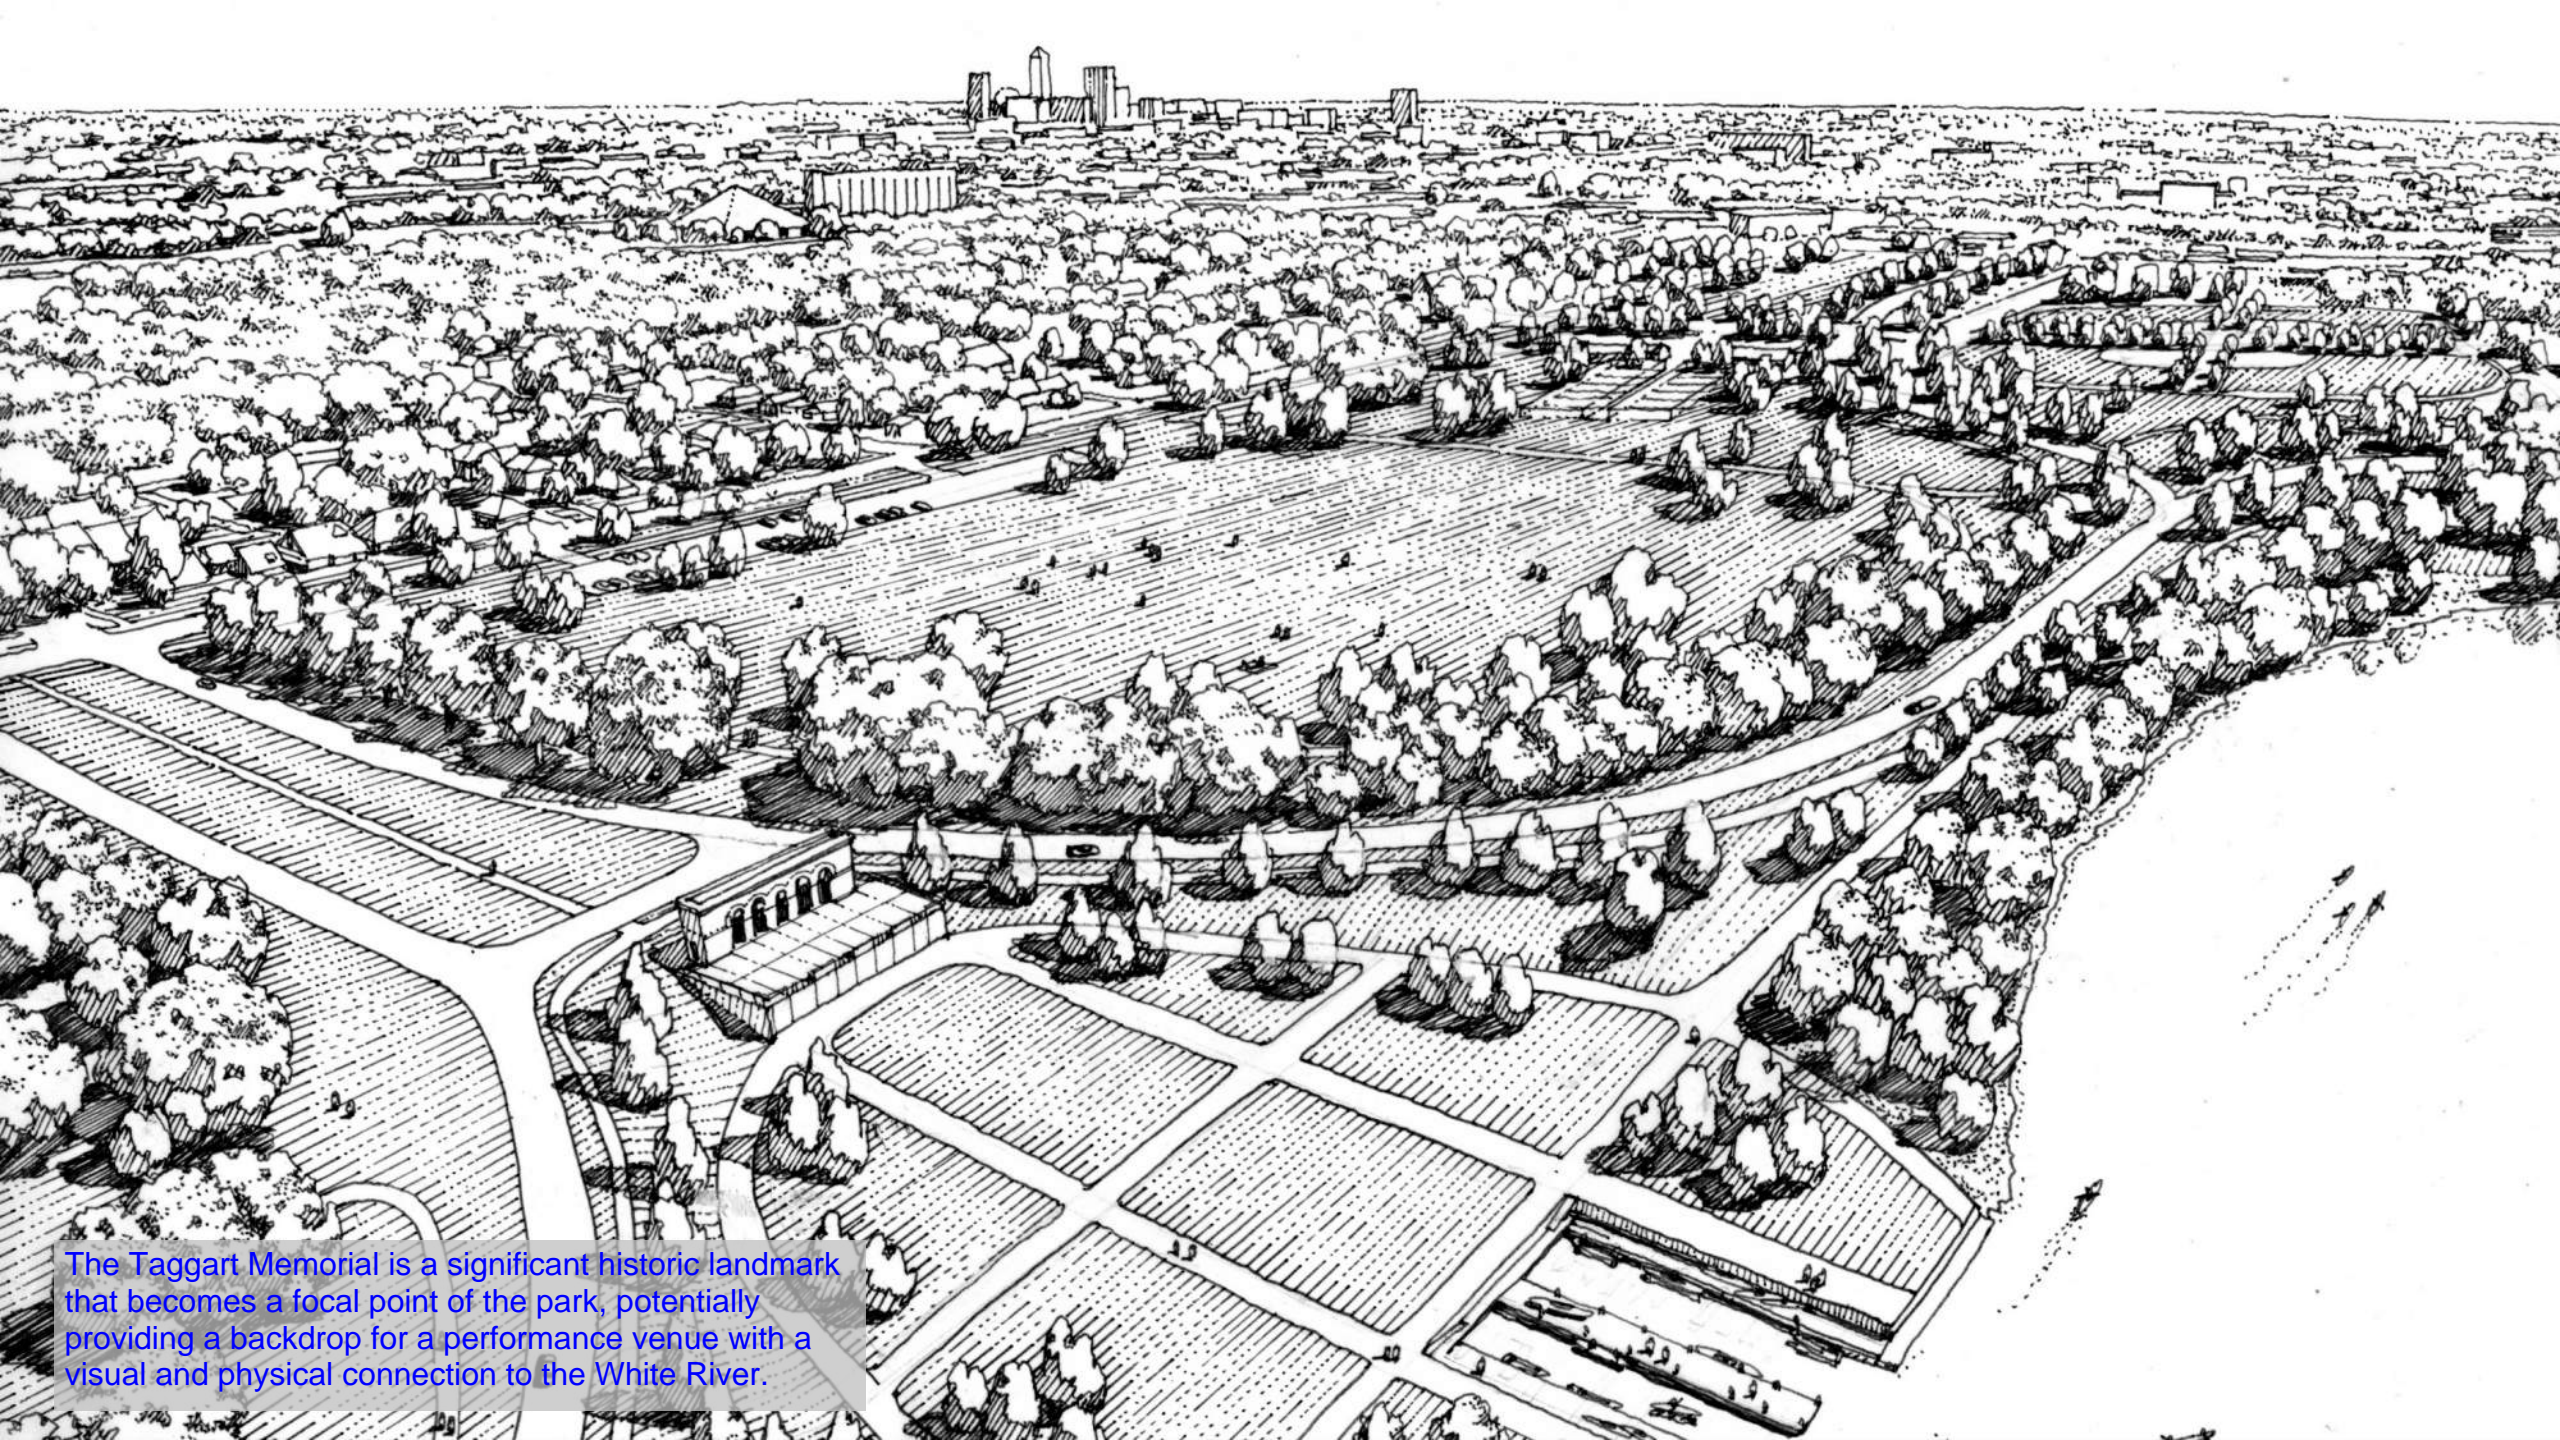

The Riverside Promenade, running along the west side of Riverside Drive from 18th Street north to 30th Street, honors and celebrates notable residents from the surrounding community and provides a safe and attractive pedestrian experience along the park's east edge.

One section of a vast, interconnected trail system within the park passes through an open lawn on what is now South Grove Golf Course, with the restored Taggart Memorial visible in the distance.

The expanded Riverside Family Center remains a hub of park activity, with the addition of a multi-level plaza and pavilion that could host music & dance, markets, festivals, and other community events.

The Taggart Memorial is a significant historic landmark that becomes a focal point of the park, potentially providing a backdrop for a performance venue with a visual and physical connection to the White River.
